Soul - self awareness?

Gosia: Does soul equal self-awareness? If so, Reptilians are self-aware, regressives too, but they don't have a soul/connection to Source. Which would mean: Self-awareness does NOT equal soul.

Yazhi: It is heavily related, yet it's not entirely that, as a soul is Source.

Gosia: Then Reptiles are self-aware but with no soul. Correct?

Yazhi: As with every species, some more than others. Because their way of seeing reality is different, for example with little to no empathy, their awareness approach contrasts with the one of Lyrians. But even though they may appear to be soulless, they simply approach Source in a different way. This besides the fact that some species of Reptiles are empathetic and emotional, like the Alpha Dracos.

Gosia: But in general self-awareness does NOT equal soul, right? I imagine there are degrees of self-awareness. As Matrix people also seem to be self-aware.

Yazhi: In general... the truth we must face here is that everything is Source, therefore everything has a connection to it. The question is how. How directly. For example, a Lyrian is a direct manifestation of the idea of Source about being someone in the material world. Yet a car, which is also Source, is a creation spawning from the mind of a Lyrian, so it's a secondary creation.

Where are the Elohi?

Gosia: And a different question. Why aren't the Elohi in orbit? Are they no longer interested in humanity? But they were before, they were very active. Why are they absent during this very interesting period in human history? Or do they not consider it interesting after so many previous resets?

Swaruu X (Athena): In fact, officially, there are no M45 ships other than the Toleka. Only ships from other Pleiadian races that are present unofficially. And they are present in small numbers, just monitoring their starseeds like everyone else. They don't make themselves known, or not very much. The Alcione Council has determined that the legal representative of the Pleiades is Alenym. Others come and go, and it's unknown when they return; they only report like air traffic. They only observe and don't interfere except through their starseeds.

Gosia: But this wouldn't mean that if a Pleiadian race wanted to get more involved, they couldn't, would it?

Swaruu X (Athena): They could, but at the moment they don't see it as necessary. An example of this is the Engan, a militarily very strong race that is ready to take action if needed, for example to support Taygeta should an incident occur. However, they are not here because their military assistance is not required at the moment, given the strong presence of the Urmah here, who are with us, escorting at all times. They are honoring the cooperation and alliance agreements with both Alcyone M45 and Taygeta specifically.

DENSITIES AND REPTILIANS

Gosia: The Ds don't exist and are just mental states, right? It doesn't depend on where you are. YOU bring your D with you. So... why can't the Reptilians be on Venus, for example, or anywhere, in their whole bodies, and why do they have to go "adjusting their frequencies", or work there through human suits, etc.? Places outside of Earth are not any special density. You are the one who generates the density. So the Reptilians could be there and anywhere. And why can't they? The same on Mars. Those regressive beings operate there without problems in their bodies.

Swaruu X (Athena): Because there's also something called the collective unconscious that generates an average frequency for the place in question, and if it doesn't coincide with that of an entity or person, they will have problems because their own mentality and body are used to being within a different frequency soup.

Gosia: What kind of problems would that cause them? They would just be uncomfortable, right? Like starseeds are on Earth. Although I understand that if you're of the highest frequency, you'll "integrate" the lower ones. The reverse could be more difficult.

Swaruu X (Athena): Health problems, what's called ET sickness, manifest as energetic problems that include even cancers and autoimmune issues. Mentally, it can induce depression or even psychotic tendencies in the case of a low-vibration being who enters a soup of frequencies higher than their own.

Gosia: Ah, so it works like it does for the starseeds here.

Swaruu X (Athena): The starseeds are the first to feel the energetic problems caused by being in a place that isn't of their vibration.

Gosia: Okay, but I understood that they can't function there at all, the Reptiles. That they don't arrive. That they need human "portals" through which to operate there in higher frequencies. And how do the ones on Mars work then?

Swaruu X (Athena): For me, the reason they can't leave Earth normally is because of the physical barrier around Earth; that's why they use portals. Not so much because they can't.

Gosia: And those on Mars, they've already created such a negative environment there that it's convenient for them to live there, yes?

Swaruu X (Athena): Mars generally does have a heavy, "bad vibe" atmosphere; it's a low-frequency place.

Robert: And could we perceive that?

Swaruu X (Athena): In my opinion, yes, because when you go to a place like Mars, your body and senses become immersed in that frequency, making you more of it, not without consequences for your health, especially your mental health, of course.

It depends on each person's mindset, that is, also on what they're used to. For example, we Swaruus can access many different frequencies because we've traveled a lot, unlike someone who never leaves their place of origin. Strictly speaking, from a frequency perspective, yes that's the case, Reptiles can't exist at high frequencies. But only as long as each remains in its own realm. Because if you put a Reptile and one of us in the same space, that dominant frequency could cause the vibrations to balance out enough. It will depend on each person's mental strength, especially that of positive people.

WATER OF TIAMAT

Gosia: About the waters from Tiamat reaching Earth. Mari said that water doesn't freeze in space like it is said on Earth. And that the water came as rain. But I think we said before that it arrived as ice rocks?

Swaruu X (Athena): It can freeze if other forces act upon it, like radiation. Or very, very slowly, since space isn't a perfect vacuum, so there is heat transfer. Which eventually causes freezing. Space isn't empty. It didn't arrive frozen from Tiamat to Earth, that's why it rained, but nowadays that water is frozen in the asteroid belt.

Gosia: So it froze in space because of radiation?

Swaruu X (Athena): Because space isn't a vacuum, it's a liquid at a high existential frequency. There IS heat transfer, but it's slow. Not like in the movies.

Gosia: So at some point that water was frozen?

Swaruu X (Athena): From Tiamat to Earth back then... NO. Because it didn't take long to fall to Earth, only a few years perhaps; that's difficult to calculate. With so much water together, it maintains its temperature much longer than if it were just a few drops.

Robert: And the Federation didn't record that destructive event?

Swaruu X (Athena): Yes, but their records aren't reliable.

Gosia: But how could water be falling if it was in liquid form, in space... where would waterfall, without up or down or gravity? It was very far from Earth and its magnetic fields.

Swaruu X (Athena): That's not how it works; gravitational fields extend very far. First, the Sun itself attracts it, and then the water is captured by Earth since it's closer. The same happens with Venus and Mercury. The same gravitational energy dynamics of the Solar System attracted the water to large objects.

Robert: And Mars... the only difference is that it didn't retain it, just like Mercury.

Swaruu X (Athena): Yes, although Mars has a lot of water underground. The same goes for Earth and Venus; their largest seas are underground.

Gosia: And wouldn't the water dissipate in space? What holds it together in a wave?

Swaruu X (Athena): Water naturally clumps together; the loose water droplets themselves come together, they don't separate.

PHOTOS IN TAYGETA

Gosia: Do ETs use cameras and video recorders? Do you take photos in Taygeta?

Swaruu X (Athena): Yes, each in their own way, but yes.

Gosia: Photos like here?

Swaruu X (Athena): Of course.

Gosia: But are they more advanced? Like moving images, for example?

Swaruu X (Athena): Yes, but that varies greatly, and the problem is the formats. Holographic isn't compatible with digital.

Gosia: But what are these photographs like? How do you take photos in Taygeta?

Swaruu X (Athena): Like there, and yes, there are 3D and zoom versions. You touch them and the image expands in 3D. Or normal ones.

Gosia: So you don't see our technology here as very primitive, the technology for taking photos?

Swaruu X (Athena): There's still the equivalent here. They just need to advance more in detail and quality.

Gosia: Do you print them?

Swaruu X (Athena): It's possible, but usually not. They're preserved in memories, like in frames, for example. But yes they can be printed too.

Gosia: I'd like it if the sound of the scene could be added to the photo. A few seconds at least. Or the smell.

Swaruu X (Athena): They have them here, but not all of them. It depends on the format. No smells.

PIANO AND INSTRUMENTS

Anéeka: Regarding the fact that many things are found on Earth and other planets, pianos and violins, I just wanted to clarify that yes, they are different, but still recognizable as pianos and violins.

On a human piano, there are white and black keys grouped in a recurring pattern, 2-3, 2-3. On a Taygetean piano, there are only keys of the same color. But the function of the black keys is due to the fact that some are protruding and others are further in, like a stepped arrangement. This is more comfortable for the hand than the human model. And on the Taygetean piano, there are two or even three levels of keys. And the keyboard is curved. Different, but recognizable as a "piano."

Trumpets and other brass instruments. For example, the Urmah are very fond of them. Drums and percussion instruments are very diverse and a constant in practically all cultures, whether Lyrian or not. In essence, all instruments are the same, with varying degrees of difference or similarity.

Others, as one might expect, are not found on Earth. Take, for instance, the water instruments found in many cultures. Water is forced under pressure through various tubes and resonating parts, like an organ with internal drums. The sound is unique and soothing. That simply doesn't exist on Earth.

Visiting friends after death

Gosia: When Taygetans die and are reborn, and when they remember their past lives, do they visit their family and friends from those past lives?

Swaruu X (Athena): They usually don't. But every person and case is different. I only know one who has done it. As far as I know.

Of course, there are many more. Let's just say it's not common. The Urmah are the same.

Gosia: But if they have clear memories of their past life, wouldn't it be interesting to visit your old friends and family? That is, if their reincarnation was linear. Because it isn't always.

Swaruu X (Athena): But it's not something common.

Gosia: And why not? I would see it as something very normal to do.

Swaruu X (Athena): It's assumed that many Taygetans die and return in another body to continue what they were doing. But perhaps because it's not always linear, that's why it's not common.

Gosia: For me, it would be interesting to reconnect with old friends.

Swaruu X (Athena): Yes and no. Because sometimes what you want is to transcend those people. It depends on each person; there's no rule. When they're born, they're different people with different preferences, just with those memories. However, many times they wish to start from scratch, again. Not everyone, but that's the tendency.

Gosia: Yes, but they remember their friends. It would be interesting to say, "Hello, it's me." Wouldn't it?

Swaruu X (Athena): If there are reasons for that, yes. But sometimes you want to forget those other people, even family. If some do it, it doesn't mean everyone does. I do see the point in starting over. Without the same faces from past lives.

Gosia: And do they know where their grave is and everything? Do they go to see it?

Swaruu X (Athena): Again, I can't know those details, but I imagine so. But I wouldn't go to see my grave even if I knew where it was.

Robert: But there aren't any cemeteries in Taygeta, right?

Swaruu X (Athena): There usually aren't.
